

Underexposed @ the Novas Gallery

THE NOVAS Gallery in Camden presents an exhibition featuring the work of award-winning, Camden-based artists, painter Matthew Small and photographer Tim Brown. Both artists explored the theme of the 'under exposed'; the deprived and marginalized urban environments, which they both currently live and work in. The result is a large-scale series of work, vividly depicting urban life.

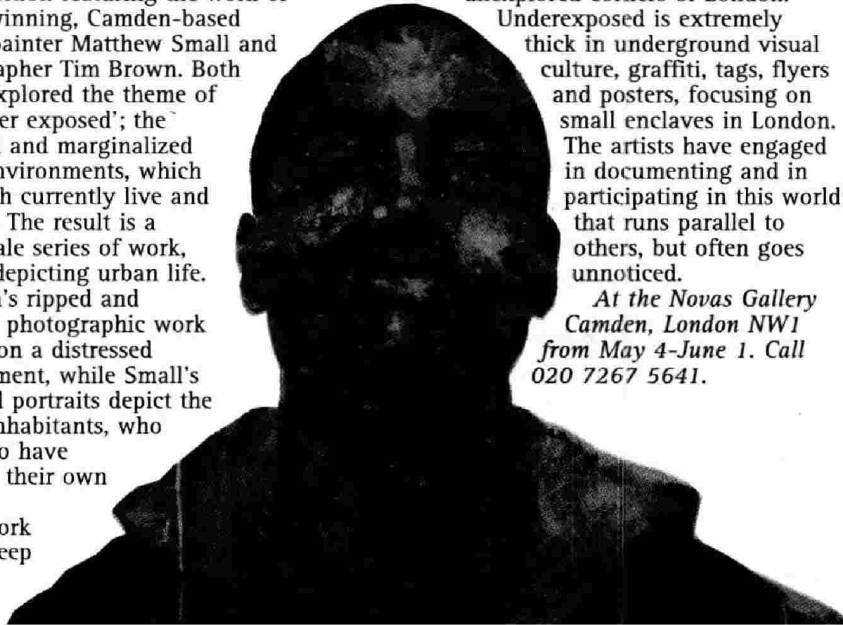

Brown's ripped and collaged photographic work focuses on a distressed environment, while Small's powerful portraits depict the young inhabitants, who appear to have ingested their own habitat.

The work delves deep into urban decay and various derelict and unexplored corners of London.

Underexposed is extremely thick in underground visual culture, graffiti, tags, flyers and posters, focusing on small enclaves in London. The artists have engaged in documenting and in participating in this world that runs parallel to others, but often goes unnoticed.
